RUNNING HARD: Bowling Green's P.J. Pope looks for daylight against OSU Saturday. OSU out-gained BG 205-40 on the ground, arguably the difference in the game.

Falcons fall to OSU

By Dan Gedney
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

On Saturday the Falcons joined a fast-growing club. The club's membership requirement: to take the Buckeyes down to the final play of the game only to come up just short of defeating the defending national champions.

The Falcons put together a furious rally in the final five minutes of the game but had their final drive stopped when Buckeye strong safety Will Allen intercepted Josh Harris' pass on the final play of the game.

"Ohio State is a great football team. Ohio State knows how to win. Ohio State has 18 wins in a row and you can see why," Harris said. "They have each other's back, they find ways to win the game and that is the mark of a great football team."

Harris finished the game with another 300-yard passing performance, completing 33 out of 54 passes for 326 yards with two touchdowns and three interceptions. Harris was disappointed with the overall performance of the offense, calling it "disgusting."

"To me it was disgusting because their defense is going to bend but they aren't going to break," he said. "They gave us some opportunities to make some plays and we didn't make them. I didn't make the throw, we didn't catch the ball, we didn't block the guy. They had a great scheme, a great coaching staff. They had a plan and they executed it, which is why they won the game. We did not make the plays, that is why we lost the game."

The Buckeyes opened up the scoring when Scott McMullen — playing for the injured Craig Krenzler — threw a seven-yard touchdown pass to Drew Carter to give OSU a 7-0 lead with 6:04 remaining in the first quarter. The touchdown was set up when Dustin Fox intercepted a pass and returned it to the BG 29-yard line.

The Falcons answered that touchdown on their ensuing drive, moving the ball 87 yards in 13 plays to tie the score at seven when Harris hit Cornelius McGrady for a seven-yard touchdown pass. The Falcons reached into their bag of tricks during the drive, lining up running back P.J. Pope under center and moving Harris to receiver on three consecutive plays. Pope was able to get the Falcons inside the Buckeye 10-yard line and set up the touchdown pass.

Following that drive the Falcon offense sputtered and failed to take advantage of opportunities created by the defense. On OSU's ensuing drive, Keon Newson forced a Maurice Hall fumble that was recovered by Will Teague at the BG 40-yard line. However, the Falcons picked up one first down before being forced to punt. After the defense forced OSU to go three and out on the next drive, the Falcons turned the ball over when Simon Frasier recovered a Harris fumble on the BG 21-yard line.

The defense held strong once again and recorded consecutive sacks that forced the Buckeyes to settle for a 47-yard field goal to take a 10-7 lead.

The Buckeyes went ahead by 10 late in the second quarter when Lydell Ross broke a fourth and one run for a 33-yard touchdown to give the Buckeyes a 17-7 lead with 2:17 remaining in the first half.

The defense continued their strong play in the second half when Janssen Patton intercepted a pass and returned it to the OSU

GSS students dispute parking

By Adam Wright
REPORTER

In a confluence of anger, an indignant Graduate Student Senate discussed abolishing the privilege that allows faculty and staff members to park in commuter lots without receiving a ticket Friday.

At its second meeting of the semester, GSS, the government body for graduate students at the University, also welcomed the director of dining services, Gail Finan, to discuss the high costs of the Student Union's catering services. GSS also passed a resolution that would conserve energy on campus.

Current parking policy dictates that those with faculty passes have the right to park in any of the commuter lots, even though 21 of the closest lots are already designated for faculty and staff parking, according to Treasurer Aurea Osgood. Much of GSS was irritated at this idea, considering those with commuter passes are ticketed when they park in faculty lots.

"It's very dishonest to ticket somebody if they can't park where they paid for because there isn't any parking available," Senator Kathy Rolsten, of the music education department, said. "It's a financial scam!"

Realizing the improbability of faculty and staff members relinquishing this privilege, Jim Rose, the Representative-at-Large, suggested that certain commuter lots be designated as overflow lots for faculty and staff when their lots are full. Another solution discussed was the parking garage that will be erected within the next five years. Unfortunately this garage will only be replacing a current parking lot and will not be an answer to the lack of commuter spaces, according to GSS president Deirdre Rogers.

GSS decided to postpone voting on legislation related to this matter until further research could be done.

Officials at Parking and Traffic could not be reached for comment.

Also on Friday, the director of dining services, Gail Finan, briefly attended the meeting and listened to concerns from senators about the high prices of catering at the Student Union. GSS felt that catering's high prices were discouraging student organizations from using the Union as a venue for their events. It was considering legislation that would allow food items purchased outside the Union to be used at these events, which the Union currently prohibits.

In response to these concerns, Ms. Finan mentioned that student organizations that are recognized by the University receive a 20 percent discount on catering. Some members of GSS did not feel that this was an adequate consolation.

"[Ms. Finan's] answer was you get a 20 percent discount, which in my mind said that she doesn't think there's a problem with the prices," Senator Juan Marin said.

In response to this dissension, Ms. Finan said that most restaurants only discount 10 percent. "We're actually undercutting our costs by giving them 20 percent," she commented.

GSS voted to withdraw this legislation to allow Ms. Finan, who has only been director of dining services since this summer, a chance to rectify these problems.

In other legislation, GSS passed a bill requesting that the University administration create and place stickers above the light switches in classrooms around campus. These stickers would remind students, faculty and staff to turn off the lights after leaving the rooms. This bill was proposed as an inexpensive way to save the University money by conserving energy.

GSS meets twice a month in room 308 in the Bowen-Thompson Student Union.

Are the cards

REPORTER

Despite results of a recent study showing an increase in student credit card debt nationwide, Bowling Green students don't fit this profile, according to area banking officials.

Although the national rate of high credit balances has increased, local banks have not seen much debt among college students here. According to Tari Christoff, banking office manager at Huntington Bank, 130 S. Main St., this may be because more students are taking precautions when using their credit cards.

"I believe that many of the students today are more cautious with the use of credit," she said. "I believe we are seeing more students that are aware of the problems with credit cards."

The study, conducted last year by the student loan company Nellie Mae, reports that students with balances from $3,000-$7,000 rose by 61 percent. This increase comes despite a 15 percent decrease in the national average credit card debt

Study says students triple debt in college amount — $2,748 in 2000 to $2,327 in 2001.

Sophomore Alissa Cropper said she knows of people her age who have been in debt, but she has never gotten into credit card trouble.

"I know a few people I used to work with who, when they graduated high school, couldn't even go to college because they had to work to pay off their credit card bill."

The study found, on average, that college students double their credit card debt and triple the number of credit cards they own throughout their college years.

Dave Kramb, executive vice president of Glass City Federal Credit Union, 1155 N. Main St., said using a credit card may at times seem easier for students than paying cash.

"It's too easy to throw a card down on the counter. My advice is to stay within their means," Kramb said. "Use your credit card, but know your limits."

Debbie Whitson, branch manager at National City Bank, 735 S. Main St., recommended that students "not carry the card with them at all times, and truly use the card in emergencies."

Students should only charge what they are able to pay off, Whitson said.

According to Cropper, she owns a credit card but only uses it for emergencies.

"It's got a $300 limit, so I've got enough in my account to cover it. ... and I thought it would be a good idea to build my credit up now, start low and work my way up."

One positive reason for college students to use credit cards is to build good credit early. Most credit card companies offer cards

"I think it's necessary for students to build up credit. My advice is to ... start with a credit card with a low balance."

TARI CHRISTOFF, BANKING OFFICE MANAGER AT HUNTINGTON

designed specifically to fit students' needs, according to Whitson.

"They're offering easier, more relaxed credit standards. They also may offer lower limits," she said.

Kramb offered another positive aspect of credit cards.

"I have a daughter who just turned 18 and is a freshman at Kent State University. And when she turned 18, I had her apply for a credit card at our [credit] union," Kramb said. "I co-signed for her, so I'm also liable for that debt. It really is educational. I encourage her to use it for small purchases she can pay off."

Another recommendation, Christoff said, would be for students to wait longer to obtain a credit card.

"I think it's necessary for students to build up credit. My advice is to wait until their junior or senior year," she said. "[Students should] start with a credit card with a low balance and make purchases using they are able to pay off on a monthly basis so they don't have to pay high interest."

Whitson said getting a credit card is an individual decision. "It depends on what that college student wants and when they want it," she said. "It depends on what their short term and long term goals are: When do they want to buy a house? When do they want to buy a car?"

The Nellie Mae study found that students take on greater debt as they progress through school. According to the study, graduating students have an average of $20,402 in combined education loan and credit card balances. This may be because the purchasing power of credit cards can be irresistible to students who have not learned about interest rates, penalty fees, and rate increases.

Because of this, some students may choose to use a debit card or checking account in place of a credit card. Boyd Davis, sophomore, said he only owns a debit card but plans to get a credit card eventually.

"Actually, my mom said it would be better because with a debit card you spend the money you have," Davis said. "With a credit card you don't necessarily have the money. I will get one, but not now."

Starting with solely a debit card may be the way to go, Whitson said.

"I would always recommend a debit card and checking account first. This is going to help them establish their spending and record keeping," she said. "If they're comfortable and successful in their checking then a credit card would be the next step."

But the decision is a matter left up to the individual, Kramb said.

"It depends. If someone is unable to control their finances, then that person should have a debit card. If they're one who tends to spend money on frivolous things, don't get a credit card," he said. "But if I'm one who says, 'Hey, I don't need that stereo,' I'm going to start establishing credit."

Offense comes to life in fourth, just a little too late 23 yard line. However, on the following play Craig Jarrett dropped a pass at the goal line after Cole Magner took a lateral from Harris and found Jarrett open. On the next play A.J. Hawk intercepted Harris's pass at the OSU 26-yard-line.

The Falcon offense finally came to life midway through the fourth quarter. After Harris hit Cole Magner for a 25-yard touchdown pass with 3:25 remaining, Janssen Patton recovered the onside kick for the Falcons. After moving the ball inside the OSU 10-yard line, the Falcons had to settle for a 33-yard field goal to close to gap to seven at 24-17.

The Falcons then looked to their defense to give them one more chance. The defense did just that when they forced the Buckeyes to go three and out. The Falcons bid to tie the game was stopped by Will Allen's interception on the final play and the defending national champions escaped with another narrow victory and extended their winning streak to 18 games.

Head coach Gregg Brandon was somber in defeat.

"There's no medal for trying. It's a loss, it stinks," he said. "Ultimately in sports it's win or lose. There were a lot of positives; we'll build on those. This is a great game to learn from. They are the defending national champions and we had a chance to win the game. We can learn from this to prepare for the Mid-American Conference season."

The Falcons were led on and off the field by Cole Magner, who had 13 receptions for 168 yards and a touchdown. Magner also tried to motivate the offense on the sideline during the Falcons comeback attempt.

"We had no other choice, we were down and we had the ball, so we had to make something happen," Magner said. "The defense had been making plays all game and it was our turn. We had to do something or the game was over."

Illinois to remove 130 children from home

By Maura Kelly
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Illinois will remove about 130 children from a church-run home for troubled youth that has been under scrutiny for its handling of a suicide and two alleged sexual assaults, state officials said Friday.

The children at Maryville Academy's City of Youth residential center in suburban Des Plaines will be moved to other Illinois facilities within 90 days, officials said.

"Maryville has had chance after chance to solve its problems," Bryan Samuels, director of the state Department of Children and Family Services, said at a news conference. "This is not a safe environment for our kids, particularly the most vulnerable of these kids."

The campus, more than a century old, was once the state's largest facility for treating abandoned and abused youths and has attracted celebrity benefactors including the late Chicago Cubs announcer Harry Caray and Who guitarist Pete Townshend.

As Samuels spoke, several dozen Maryville supporters gathered outside.

"I think it's a tragedy, and I feel that it's a shame they made Maryville to look like a dangerous place," said Ron Brooks, 46, a resident of the campus as a youth who now works there as a family educator. "You're going to have problems. You can't make sure everything is perfect."

James Guidi, Maryville's program and clinical manager, said he and other Maryville officials had started to fix the facility's problems, and would have worked with state authorities to move children who were not receiving appropriate care.

"I think it's a very tragic decision," said Guidi, who began the day-to-day supervision of Maryville in July. "It's going to disrupt 130 children's lives, and I'm not so sure it was necessary to do that."

The state will resume sending children to the Des Plaines campus if the institution can correct its problems, officials said.

The 120-year-old facility is run by the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago. Its leader, Cardinal Francis George, issued a statement saying he regretted the state's decision but would help make the necessary changes.

The facility has been under scrutiny for more than a year. Various monitors and critics have said its staff is not properly trained to deal with children with severe behavioral, mental and emotional problems.

State-appointed monitors found problems with runaways, sex among youths, poor oversight and problematic reporting of incidents. Officials at Maryville and the child-welfare department confirmed this week that FBI agents are also looking into the suicide of a 14-year-old girl last year as well as possible Medicaid fraud.

Maryville Academy's 20 other facilities in Illinois will remain open. Guidi said five or six children sent to the facility will remain at the campus.

Law schools sue Department of Defense over recruiters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A group of law schools, professors and students is suing the Department of Defense, alleging its requirement that law schools allow military recruiters on campus violates the First Amendment.

Many universities have barred recruiters, arguing the military's ban on homosexuals violated nondiscrimination rules.

But last year, after the Defense Department threatened to pull federal funding from law schools that deny military recruiters access to students, schools including Harvard and Boston universities and Boston College backed off their bans.

Kent Greenfield, a Boston College law professor leading the lawsuit, said the government is forcing agreement on its policies from schools that fear the loss of benefits, and that's "not the American way."

The lawsuit also argues there are flaws in the 1996 law, which permits the Defense Department to deny federal money to institutions of higher learning that restrict military recruiting or ROTC on campus.

The law "was passed to send the message that academic institutions were being too liberal," Greenfield told The Boston Globe. "They are using this law to reach into the core of our educational philosophy and change it, and that's contrary to the First Amendment."

The lawsuit was filed Friday in federal court in Newark, N.J.

Judge John C. Lifland gave the government a week to respond to a request for a restraining order.

A phone message could not be left on a Department of Defense media line Saturday because the voice mailbox was full.

Students need to manage money

The University should add one more course to their curriculum — Credit Cards 101: How to manage credit cards without getting yourself into debt.

This is not to say that all students who own credit cards will do go into debt. However, the fact is that there are many college students who do get themselves into trouble when using plastic to pay for most of their purchases.

Some students do not know the added items that go into using their credit cards, such as: penalty fees, interest rates and changes in rates.

Most students do not realize that if they do not pay off their charges for the month on their credit cards, the amount that is left unpaid is not just carried over to the next month's balance, but it has extra fees attached to it.

The best idea for a college student is not to get a credit card until they are financially responsible and prove to be. Many times students may think they are able to handle a credit card and may think, I will not go into debt, I know how to manage my money. However, it is easier than one might think. Once debt occurs, it is hard to pay off.

A good idea for students is to use a debit card or a checking account for their purchases. This way, the money that you are able to use is limited to the amount of funds that are available in your account. If a student uses a debit card they are able to keep track of how much money they are spending after each purchase. With a credit card students are not always able to keep a record of how much they have spend and are likely to exceed the amount of money they have to pay it off.

This leads to the next point, which is — if you don't have the money to pay off your credit card balance for the month do not make the purchases. One of the worst mindsets of students who have credit cards can be: I'll just pay it off the next month or I'll get some money somehow to pay it off. If you don't have the money to pay off the bill then obviously you don't need to purchase that new stereo, or that new CD you have been wanting.

A good hint of advice would be that if you know you are not going to have the money to pay for it later, don't buy it now. Just wait till you have enough money where you are able to get it.

Credit cards may be one of the worst items to give a college student, especially in their first years. However, students need to learn that we are in college now and we have to start acting like adults, which also means learning how to be financially responsible. Credit cards can be good, but they can also be trouble.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

File sharing is not a crime, it's an infringement

This is in response to the cartoon in last Friday's edition of the Opinion section. This cartoon depicted two inmates with markings on the wall to indicate how long they have been in prison. The inmate on the right marked the time in lines, the other marked in musical notes. The inmate on the right was asking the other whether he was "one of those internet music downloaders."

There is a great fallacy with this cartoon, and it sends a dangerous message to everyone. Contrary to popular belief, file sharing is not a crime. In fact piracy is not a crime and even more so copyright infringement. Copyright infringement is exactly that, infringement. The most that can happen to a file sharer convicted of copyright infringement is s/he will have to pay damages to the plaintiff. Copyright infringement will not land you in jail or give you a criminal record, which of course are much greater penalties. Theft, however, will. This is why copyright infringement is not defined as theft. When one steals, he/she denies the original owner access to something that is rightfully theirs and attempts to claim ownership over the stolen object.

When one infringes a copyright, he/she, generally, make a copy of the original work, thus decreasing its value. Copyright infringement does not deny the original owner of anything he already didn't have. Appropriate sentences need to be given to the appropriate breaches of law. Jail time for a negligible loss of money is not appropriate.

People need to know their rights in these situations, and not be scared by the fear, uncertainty and doubt that the Record Industry Association of America spreads. Cases like copyright infringement are issues that can not be described in physical analogies (i.e. theft), and must be treated as a new and separate issue. The future of technology and how we interact with it depends on this.

People need one day to talk like Pirates

MATT SUSSMAN
Humor Columnist

Last Friday was National Talk Like a Pirate Day. Its function goes without saying, but there was a story behind it.

On June 6, 1995, John Baur and Mark Summers (no, not the "Super Sloppy Double Dare" guy — that was Marc) engaged in a simple game of racquetball. Like the silly people they were, they began shouting remarks to each other. Eventually, the comments evolved with an accent a pirate would use if he were to play racquetball. At the end of the day, their substandard performances were overshadowed by the amusing pirate slang. It wasn't long before they realized they should do this one day a year.

After a while, they contacted "real" humor columnist Dave Barry about their invention. He was convincingly sold on the idea. After his column in 2002, the holiday instantly became the fourth most popular holiday in the United States — behind Christmas, Thanksgiving and Sweetest Day.

This holiday was bound to happen sooner or later. Just observe the facts: Pirates are some of the more vile humans, but being a pirate is the most favored occupation of one-legged people who like parrots. Last year's Super Bowl was between the Buccaneers and the Raiders. This past summer, Johnny Depp made both scurvy and wearing lots of jewelry extremely sexy.

So-called "music pirates" are in danger. The scoundrels from the Record Industry Association of America are threatening any lazy bum who illegally downloads Flock of Seagulls to walk the plank. I can't blame them. If these music-loving swashbucklers don't stop sharing music files among themselves, musicians such as Kid Rock might not be able to afford three meals a day, and he will become pale and malnourished. Then again, the term "music piracy" should have never been coined, because it makes the process look too cool. If they wanted to avoid this illegal activity, they should have called it "music terrorism." Instead, it's piracy, and on this day our dialogue should reflect that.

Therefore, I tried to encourage all instructors last Friday to give their lectures in pirate dialect. This ultimately kept the hungover guys in the back row awake and interested in their introductory course. They cut off the bottom of their pant legs and assembled crude eye patches and armbands, while I shouted out "shiver me timbers" for no apparent reason. The official website (<http://www.talk-likeapirate.com/>) had many more beneficial tidbits. I shall now conclude this brief public service announcement in my best pirate script:

"So, if ye be one of me hearties, ye best be keen to speak like a true swashbuckler. Be ye but a cowardly landlubber, it's Davy Jones's locker for ye. Avast with ye treacherous ways! Spread the word to all the lads and lasses that today ye shall be a man of the sea. Talk Like a Pirate Day has no place for filthy scallywags. So, swab the deck before ye be on your way. Arrr!"

Guest Column

Imagine a life without "Friends." Imagine a world where NBC can no longer afford its most popular program. No Rachel, no Phoebe or Chandler or Ross, no Monica or Joey. No "Must-See" TV. No quality programs like "Law and Order" or "Good Morning, Miami."

OK, maybe not "Good Morning, Miami." The dark nightmare of a world without free network TV haunts Michael K. Powell, the chairman of the Federal Communications Commission. He led the push for the FCC's new rules on media ownership, telling ABC News: "It is the network that pays for 'Friends' and pays Jennifer Aniston's salary. And pays the $10 million per episode that it takes to produce a program of that quality."

To preserve network TV, in all of its glory, against encroachment from cable, video, the Internet and other interlopers, Powell's FCC voted 3-2 last June to allow networks to own local TV stations reaching as much as 45 percent of the nation's population, up from the current 35-percent limit. Local TV stations, particularly in big markets, are where the money is.

The new media ownership rules left in place provisions that allow conglomerates to operate as many as eight radio stations in a single market. The rules lifted a ban against a single company owning a daily newspaper, a television station and radio stations in the same market. And the rules set out a "diversity" index governing how much of each market can be served by media outlets with common ownership.

Powell defends the rules as preserving "localism," but many members of Congress on both sides of the aisle disagree. They note that the big networks are owned by big corporations that also own lots of other things, including cable, video and Internet providers, movie studios, newspapers, radio stations and other mass media. That's too much power in too few hands, they say, and they're right.

Opposition to the FCC rules has sprung up at the grass-roots level, linking conservatives suspicious of the dominance of companies such as The New York Times, with liberals who seek a broad diversity of voices in the media.

This week, the Senate voted 55-40 to block the new rules. The House is already on record as opposing the 45-percent rule for network ownership of local stations, but House leaders have vowed to block any vote on tampering with the other rules. President Bush has threatened to veto any bill blocking the FCC rules. Undaunted, Senator Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, is laying plans to cut the FCC's budget for enforcing the new rules.

In promulgating its new rules, the FCC did nothing to promote localism and a great deal to further the special interests of giant corporations like Viacom, News Corp., General Electric and Disney. Even if, God forbid, it should mean the end of "Friends," Congress should roll back the rules instead of rolling over for Big Media.

FREIGHT TRAIN ENGINEER STOPS TRAIN IN INTERSECTION

POTTSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A freight train engineer who said he had exceeded the number of hours he could work stopped his train in a downtown intersection for two hours and refused to move, police said.

The engineer, whose name was not released, told police he was instructed by his supervisor to stop the train after passing the intersection Friday. But he didn't pull the train far enough forward to raise the intersection's crossing gates.

Survey shows Davis' chance of keeping job getting better

By Tom Chornaue
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Gov. Gray Davis' prospects for keeping his job appear to be brightening, according to a new poll that shows growing opposition to the recall movement.

The Public Policy Institute of California survey, released yesterday, showed 53 percent of voters supporting a recall, down 5 percentage points from the institute's previous poll taken in August.

That was good news for Davis, analysts agreed. But they were uncertain whether the governor could continue to close the gap enough between now and Oct. 7, the recall election's scheduled date.

"The fate of the recall is much more uncertain than it was a month ago," said Mark Baldassare, poll director for the Public Policy Institute. "But it is still going to be difficult for the governor to make the case given that three out of four voters still disapprove of the job he's doing."

Candidates vying to replace Davis were campaigning furiously under the expectation the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals would reverse a ruling delaying the ballot to prevent the use of unreliable punch-card ballots.

An 11-judge panel was to hear arguments today on whether a three-judge panel of the court erred when it ruled earlier this month that the election must be postponed.

CAMPAIGNING: California governor Gray Davis holds hands with Dolores Huerta, co-founder of the United Farm Workers union on stage during a labor rally in front of San Francisco City Hall.

Bustamante told reporters Saturday night after delivering a speech to the San Diego County Democratic Party. "We've got problems here in California and we need to get off this recall campaign."

During his speech to some 400 fellow Democrats, Bustamante took shots at Republican actor Arnold Schwarzenegger's high-profile campaign.

"I got some pretty bad news for Arnold," Bustamante said. "Governing is not about grabbing some spotlights, it's about rolling up your sleeves and getting the work done."

Among his party's accomplishments, Bustamante said, were Davis' recent signing of legislation expanding financial privacy rights for consumers and legal rights for gay partners.

Davis also touted those accomplishments during appearances Saturday in San Francisco with Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina, a Democratic presidential candidate.

Former President Clinton and former Vice President Al Gore appeared with Davis earlier in the week as allies in the governor's attempt to cast the recall as a Republican power grab.

U.S. admits far fewer refugees

By Mark Fritz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Those huddled masses yearning to breathe free shouldn't hold their breath waiting for passage to America, which is setting a new record this year for refusing sanctuary to eligible asylum-seekers.

The United States will admit about 25,000 refugees by the end of the current budget year, a low for a nation founded by people fleeing persecution. Experts blame both terrorism fears and an obsolete asylum program that still lists "Soviets" as one of the top five nationalities that deserve U.S. protection.

The total number of resettlements as of Sept. 16 — the current fiscal year concludes at the end of this month — is only half the 50,000 admissions quota approved by President Bush for 2003. That ceiling itself was a new low.

"We're seeing a total deterioration," said Joel Charny, an analyst for Refugees International, a Washington-based lobbyist group.

Refugee resettlement specialists see signs that the 2004 quotas, which are due to be determined by the White House in mid-October, won't grow. A State Department briefing with Congressional immigration staffers this week left some attendants with strong indications that refugee quotas would stay low or drop lower.

U.S. officials say the program is in transition, and wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, the tightening of domestic security measures, a lack of U.S. resettlement staffers and a refugee-admission criteria based on Cold War-era thinking are to blame for the sharp dip.

One example of why the United States will fall short of reaching its quota: Roughly 6,000 Afghan refugees cleared for admittance to the United States suddenly find themselves facing repatriation to a country that is under U.S. control, but still highly unstable.

Arthur Dewey, Undersecretary of State for Population, Refugees and Migration, said that a program conceived in 1980 — when the primary sources of refugees came from Southeast Asia and the then-Soviet Union — now must concentrate on about 80 areas of conflict. And this comes at a time when the new, terror-driven Department of Homeland Security has seized control of who gets into this immigrant nation.

Dewey said his critics know the constraints U.S. refugee officials faced. He noted that they were able to at least relocate large numbers of refugees to less-dangerous areas of West and East Africa, and that an asylum program is in no danger of disappearing.

"We will find the resources to continue it and Congress will make sure of that," Dewey told The Associated Press in an interview this week.

The Sept. 11, 2001 terror attacks prompted Washington to slash refugee admissions for three straight years.

BLIX SAYS U.S. SHOWED QUESTIONABLE HONESTY IN IRAQ

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Former U.N. chief weapons inspector Hans Blix accused the United States of showing "questionable honesty" over Iraq and said the country was attacked despite posing no immediate threat. Blix spent three years searching for Iraqi chemical, biological and ballistic missiles as head of the U.N. Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission. He has been critical of the role played by the U.S. and British governments in Iraq, in interviews since his retirement on June 30.

By Deborah Seward
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — America's failure to stabilize Iraq has left Russian President Vladimir Putin convinced he was right: The war was a bad idea. That conviction has boosted Putin's confidence, and, at their summit this week, President Bush will encounter a man willing to challenge America on Iraq, Iran and even the war on terrorism.

Before meeting Bush at Camp David later this week, Putin will address the U.N. General Assembly meeting that will focus on Iraq's future. With Washington seeking to maintain its hold on administrating the country, the Russian leader insisted over the weekend that the United Nations "must have a real role, not a decorative role" in Iraq.

Germany, France and Britain have also called for more authority for the world body in Iraq, as Washington debates with its allies over a new U.N. resolution. British Prime Minister Tony Blair, however, has not joined France's call for a handover of power to Iraqi authorities within months, backing the U.S. stance against what he calls a too hasty transfer.

Putin says he's ready to negotiate — and ready to be blunt about Russia's stance.

During a four-hour interview with a group of U.S. reporters that lasted until early evening Saturday, the stiffness that characterized Putin's early meetings with Western media was gone. It was replaced by boldness, even spontaneity and an occasional phrase in English. His tone was harsh when it came to his least favorite subject: the war in Chechnya.

Putin's way of responding to questions on Russian conduct over Iraq, Iran and Chechnya is to accuse the West of acting impro-erly. Such feints draw attention away from the question but they are not very illuminating.

Russia strongly opposed the war in Iraq, and Putin said that Russia's position hadn't changed, and that "the situation that is developing in Iraq is the best confirmation that Russia was right."

Putin said his relationship with Bush was strong enough that they could express their views "bluntly" and say things the other might not like. "But we listen to each other and we are looking for a solution," he said.

Putin defended Russia's nuclear cooperation with Iran, saying his country was doing all it could to make sure Russia's nuclear assistance could not be used to help Iran develop nuclear weapons.

Then, he turned on the West, accusing it of double standards, saying Russia had evidence that Western companies, including American ones, were selling so-called "dual use" technologies, material that can be used for peaceful, as well as weapons, purposes.

In answering questions about Chechnya, Putin also lashed out at the United States. He had scathing words for Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Steven Pifer, who last week warned that Kremlin policy in Chechnya may be "among the most troubling" issues at the summit.

The Russian leader said he wouldn't comment on remarks by "a middle-level diplomat" and suggested that Secretary of State Colin Powell deal with Pifer. He characterized the rebels as "scoundrels" and accused the United States of clandestine talks with rebel representative Zelimkhan Yandarbiyev, who lives in Qatar.

Taliban leaders meet, reshape anti-U.S. war

By Amir Shah
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — Taliban supreme commander Mullah Mohammed Omar has held a meeting with other Taliban leaders to reorganize their resurgent campaign against U.S. forces and the Afghan government, a purported spokesman for the group said yesterday.

The spokesman, who said his name was Sayed Hamid Agha, telephoned Associated Press reporters in Afghanistan and Pakistan and read out a state-

"Over the last few days we established a shura (council) under the leadership of Mullah Omar," Agha said. "The shura appointed four committees — military, political, cultural and economic to regulate all relevant matters."

One of the two AP reporters recognized the man's voice and knew him to be a Taliban militant. He also received a written copy of the same statement from a second man with suspected Taliban ties in the western Pakistani city of Peshawar.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Kabul, Roy Glover, said the Taliban statement "obviously would be of some interest to us," but declined to comment further.

Amrullah Saleh, a senior Afghan intelligence chief, said similar statements have been circulated regularly, but that it was new for them to detail meetings of Taliban leaders.

"I think it's part of their psychological operations to send a message to the people that they have some operations," he told the Associated Press in Kabul.

Iraq to open all sectors of economy except oil

By Paul Geitner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Aiming to reverse decades of economic decay under Saddam Hussein, Iraq's leadership council announced sweeping free-market reforms Sunday that would permit foreign investment and impose income taxes — but keep oil under government control.

Yet even the council's U.S. backers conceded that big multinationals were not likely to rush to Iraq, despite its promise.

as long as instability reigns and violence erupts daily.

"Capital is a coward," U.S. Treasury Secretary John Snow said. "It doesn't go places where it feels threatened. Companies will not send employees to places that aren't secure."

Snow was addressing an international banking conference shortly after meeting with Iraq's new finance minister, Kamil Mubdir al-Gailani. He applauded al-Gailani's blueprint as "policies that make sense ... that offer real promise."

The reforms pave the way for a sell-off of the state-owned companies that dominated Iraq's economy under Saddam — if buyers can be found. The changes would allow 100 percent foreign ownership of Iraqi firms, except those in the oil sector.

Addressing the same group of pinstriped private bankers, al-Gailani said his objective was to "promote Iraqi economic growth and raise the living standards of all Iraqis as soon as possible."

Jarrett classy after game

BAKER

Vitamin Z

It was a day that had a little bit of everything.

A day that began with both marching bands saluting each other, with BG's playing the OSU fight song, and the "Best damn band in the land" lining up to resemble the BG mascot.

But the most class on Saturday was shown by someone who may have had the hardest day of all.

Craig Jarrett, a fifth year senior, had a chance for a special moment early in the third quarter, with the Falcons trailing 17-7. Jarrett dropped what looked to be a sure touchdown on what was a beautifully executed trick play.

The play proved to be crucial, as Bowling Green would go on to turn the ball over on the next play, and didn't regain momentum until late in the fourth quarter, when they were trailing 24-7.

Jarrett has had only one reception all season, and did not make a catch yesterday.

It would have been easy for the tight end to stay in the locker room after the game, to keep to himself, to not answer questions.

No one would have blamed him for doing it. It's what most of us probably would have done.

But Jarrett didn't do that. He came up to the press room after the game and answered questions for over a dozen reporters, knowing that most wanted to ask him about the one play where he didn't make the catch.

Jarrett is one of the success stories in college sports. A college walk on who earned a scholarship for the 2000 after beginning as a walk on in 1999. In 2001, Jarrett played in all 11 games, getting one start against Marshall, and making two catches for 24 yards on the season.

A dedicated student, he was also named to the Mid-American Conference honor roll, and inducted into the Omicron Delta Kappa National Honor Society.

Jarrett missed all of last season due to injury.

BG's performance yesterday was one in which the team could have given up, but like always, played until the final gun.

The team will get respect around the country for that, if not more votes in the national poll.

Jarrett's willingness to talk after the game also earned respect, for both himself and the team. He should be credited, along with many of his teammates, for talking after a difficult loss. The players were no doubt frustrated, but showed class by speaking about the game afterwards.

BG may not have won the game, but they continued to gain respect, and that's as important as anything.

BOWLING GREEN STATE UNIVERSITY

Defense strong in defeat

By Zach Baker
SPORTS EDITOR

The football team was a few plays away from an upset in Saturday's 24-17 loss to Ohio State.

Bowling Green's ability to stay in the game was due in large part to the Falcon defense, which put forth another strong outing.

In the week before the game, OSU head coach Jim Tressel said that one area that was often overlooked on BG's team was the strength of its defense.

On Saturday, Tressel got a first hand look at what he had been talking about.

While OSU was able to gain 205 yards rushing, the Falcons held them to just 24 points, and yielded only seven in the second half.

When the Falcons cut the lead from 24-17 with 1:46 left in the game, their attempt at an onside kick was unsuccessful.

With just two timeouts left, BG needed its defense to come up with one more stop to give the offense one last chance.

They did, forcing OSU to punt with less than a minute to go.

Janssen Patton, who had

Bowling Green's only interception, talked about the defensive stand.

"That's what we work for, all season long," Patton said. "We pride ourselves on working hard in the fourth quarter. We know we have to come out and make plays, and that's what we did."

Falcon quarterback Josh Harris gave credit to the defense for allowing the Falcons to stay in the game, and said that they will be a major factor in the rest of the season.

"Our defense is a championship defense," Harris said. "We're going to ride them all the way to the end."

Falcons' coach Gregg Brandon said that the defense continually gave the team chances against the Buckeyes.

"Our defense, I thought played lights out, and they hung in there with them," Brandon said. "... They kept giving us opportunities, and that's all you can ask for."

Despite such praise, several players on the defense were not as complementary of their play.

Falcons swept by Buckeyes

COLUMBUS — By day, the ambiance during the bus ride to take on Ohio State was filled with excitement and enthusiasm for the BGSU volleyball team.

By night, everything was shrouded in mystery and disappointment as the Buckeyes defeated the Falcons in three sets before 1,052 fans at St. John Arena on Saturday night.

"I'm really disappointed because I feel we let a golden opportunity slip away," head coach Denise Van De Walle said after the game. "We passed the ball very well tonight and that was the bright spot of the match, but offensively and defensively we didn't look like Bowling Green volleyball."

BG arrived at the gym two hours before the match was set to start — 30 minutes behind schedule — but when the teams took the court for their first meeting since Van De Walle's inaugural campaign as coach in 1983, the Falcons looked right on cue.

Chrissy Gothke's dig on Stacey Gordon's first attempted kill set the tone early for the Falcons, and despite falling behind 0-2, BG took an 8-4 lead, ignited by Melissa Mohr, who had two kills during the run.

OSU's Amanda Miller tied the match at 10 with one of her eight kills on the night, though BG would surge ahead to take a 17-14 advantage.

The Buckeyes went on a 6-0 run, forcing Van De Walle to call a time out. However, the Falcons could not get any closer than three for the remainder, falling 30-26 in the first set.

BG held Gordon; the Buckeyes All-American to a .053 hitting percentage, but the Falcons had six service errors and only hit .054 for the set.

The second set started off as sloppy as the first. Still, BG managed to take a 4-1 advantage.

Katherine Grant's kill gave OSU their first lead of the set, 13-12. BG pulled even at 17-17, but three consecutive kills by the Buckeyes led to a time out.

Once again, the Falcons could not come closer than three and OSU ended the set on a 13-8 run to get the victory.

With BG holding a 22-20 lead in the final set, the Buckeyes

Women's soccer has big weekend

By Kevin Shields
SPORTS REPORTER

The Falcon women's soccer team swept their two opponents this weekend at Cochrane Field and showed some strong play in the process. They were able to come from behind to defeat Akron on Friday 2-1 and got a convincing win over Wright State yesterday by score of 3-0.

"Both games were very pleasing, as far as effort was concerned this weekend," coach Andy Richards said. "We knew coming in that the games were winnable, but we needed to play well and we earned the two wins we got."

In Friday's game against Akron, the Falcons and Zips were unable to find the net in the first half of play as both teams struggled to get shots. The play was back and forth with very few opportunities coming up for either team.

Ashley Wentzel had a good scoring opportunity in the first half, but her shot was tipped over the goal post by Akron goalie Crystal Tabor.

The Falcons generated opportunities early in the second half, but were still unable to beat Tabor. Akron was able to capitalize off a counterattack as Mirka Mohns slid one by Ali Shingler in the lower right corner of the net to give Akron a 1-0 lead with 26:39 left in the game.

BG answered back with 13:58 remaining as Lindsay Carter's corner kick found Samantha Meister in front of the net, whose header then beat Tabor to even the game at 1-1. After a missed opportunity by Akron two minutes later and a missed chance by Meister with five minutes left, the game seemed to be heading for overtime.

However, in the final minute Keeley Dayton was able to control the ball and find Julie Trundle, who charged down the

Bengals' comeback falls short

By Joe Kay
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — Jerome Bettis lowered his battering-ram shoulders and plowed into the end zone. Joey Porter yanked down the quarterback as the Terrible Towels twirled. Different setting, very familiar scene.

The Steelers got back to their black-and-gold basics yesterday, running the ball when they wanted and turning Porter loose during a 17-10 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals.

"It was good to see us kind of re-establish a little bit of our tradition," coach Bill Cowher said. "That's like the days of old."

Tens of thousands of Pittsburgh fans were in the crowd of 64,596 — the largest ever to see the Bengals play in Cincinnati — and stayed on their feet as the Steelers [2-1] went back to grinding it out.

In their first two games, they became dependent upon Tommy Maddox's passing. Amos Zereoue managed only 104 yards in the two games.

Bettis, relegated to a backup role in preseason, showed that The Bus still has a few miles left. When Zereoue needed a rest late in the third quarter, Bettis took over and led the Steelers to a decisive touchdown through brute force.

Toppling tacklers as he went, Bettis ran six plays in a row for 23 yards, putting Pittsburgh ahead 14-3. He lowered his head and powered into the end zone on fourth-and-goal from inside the 1.

"You get frustrated," said

Bettis, who had 59 yards in 16 carries. "As a running back, you want the opportunity to make a difference in the game. It's tough. When you have two running backs who want the football, it's going to be difficult."

Cowher ran onto the field and smacked Bettis on the left shoulder pad after the touchdown, a sign of his delight over a running game that was rediscovered.

So was Porter, who suffered gunshot wounds to the buttocks and right thigh three weeks earlier. He made an immediate impact on a defense that kept the Bengals (0-3) in check until the closing minutes.

The Steelers co-captain came out for the pregame coin toss and correctly called heads. Porter, the Steelers' top defensive player last season, also had one of four sacks of Jon Kitna.

Porter broke through the line, grabbed the back of Kitna's jersey and pulled him down in the third quarter, thwarting another Bengals possession.

"It seemed like it was a long time coming," Porter said. "I was ready to go, and the adrenaline was going to get me through just about anything. That felt like Christmas felt when I was 11 years old."

Cincinnati was lost without running back Corey Dillon, who strained his groin in the second quarter and didn't return. Kitna was 16-of-24 for 157 yards with one interception and a late touchdown pass.

As first-year coach Marvin Lewis watched helplessly from the sideline, the Bengals fell to 0-3 for the seventh time in the last 13 years, which marks their reign as the NFL's worst team.

"Nothing is surprising," Lewis said. "We didn't want to be 0-3. We've played three teams that we knew were going to be pretty good, so there was a chance that it was going to happen."

Since Cowher took over as coach in 1992, the Steelers have rushed for more yards than any other team. They didn't do much after Bettis was benched in the preseason for Zereoue, who had 58 yards through three quarters Sunday.

When Zereoue came to the sideline to catch his breath, Bettis took over.

"When Jerome gets going, it's pretty hard to stop him," said Zereoue, who finished with 69 yards on 16 carries. "I thought, hey, he's getting it done. Coach Cowher and I both decided to let him go."

Bettis, who had only 21 yards in the first two games, topped that total on his first six carries. He also did the tough work as the Steelers ran out the clock after Kitna's 5-yard touchdown pass to Peter Warrick cut it to 17-10 with 5:54 left.

Notes: Maddox was 21-of-34 for 240 yards, including a 23-yard pass to Jerame Tuman on a fake field goal that set up Pittsburgh's first touchdown. ... Steelers CB Chidi Iwuoma left in the second half with a mild concussion.

Toledo gets big victory over ranked Pittsburgh

By John Seewer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOLEDO — Pittsburgh heard all week about how dangerous Toledo could be. The Panthers didn't get the message until it was too late.

Bruce Gradkowski threw for 461 yards and three touchdowns for the Rockets, the final score coming with just 43 seconds left as Toledo stunned No. 9 Pitt 35-31 on Saturday night.

Gradkowski lofted the ball into right corner of the end zone and Lance Moore made a diving catch, just dragging his feet in bounds. The pass capped a 15-play, 83 yard drive that began with 4:36 left.

Pitt's defense was no match for Toledo's spread offense that kept the Panthers (2-1) off-balance most of the night.

"I don't think they've shown that much firepower as they did today," Pitt coach Walt Harris said. "They fought their way back from 10 points down. They never gave up."

Gradkowski was overwhelmed afterward.

"I'm so pumped about this team that words can't express what I feel right now," he said.

Gradkowski, a sophomore from Pittsburgh in only his fourth start, calmly directed the Rockets (3-1) down the field on the final drive.

The key play came on fourth-and-1. He found tight end Andrew Clarke along the sideline for a 13-yard pickup.

Gradkowski relied on short passes as Rockets then chipped away at the Panthers. They converted three times on third down to keep the drive alive.

Pitt had one final shot at the end zone, but Rod Rutherford's pass was batted down in the end zone, setting off a wild celebration on the field.

Toledo coach Tom Amstutz called it one of the biggest victories in school history.

"It's a wonderful feeling," he said. "I'm a little numb right now."

The Panthers led 31-21 early in the fourth quarter and seemed to be in control.

But Gradkowski, who finished 49-of-62 for 461 yards, led the Rockets on a 98-yard drive — the big play coming on third down at midfield when he found Steve Odom for a 31-yard gain.

That set up Trinity Dawson's 2-yard leap into the end zone that cut Pitt's lead to 31-28 with 6:45 remaining.

Neither team could establish its running game, forcing the quarterbacks to take over. And both were up to the task.

Rutherford picked up apart Toledo's defense, spreading the ball among all his receivers. He finished with 315 yards passing and four touchdowns, but he also had two interceptions in the second half that kept Toledo in the game.

Harris blamed the two interceptions on himself.

"We got greedy," he said. "Part of it was my fault."

Pitt all but abandoned its running game on a third quarter drive that started when Larry Fitzgerald made a leaping 36-yard catch with two defenders hanging on him.

Six plays later, Rutherford hit tight end Kris Wilson for a 5-yard touchdown — his third scoring catch of the night that put Pitt ahead 31-21.

Fitzgerald, one of the nation's best receivers, finished with 201 yards receiving but was held to just one touchdown.

Wilson, often overshadowed by Fitzgerald in Pitt's pass offense, made a pair of nifty catches for touchdowns in the first half.

He leaped above Toledo's Patrick Body on a 20-yard scoring catch for the Panthers' first TD and made a sliding catch in the back of the end zone that gave Pitt a 17-7 lead with 5:02 left in the first half.

It looked like Pitt was ready to take control, but Toledo answered in just four plays.

Gradkowski hit Moore on a short curl pass over the middle and Pitt defensive back Keon Jackson slipped trying to make the tackle, allowing Moore to break free untouched for a 53-yard touchdown.

Moore ended up with 15 receptions for 162 yards.

Defense performs at OSU

"Overall, I just believe that since we didn't win the game, the defense didn't do a good enough job," said linebacker Daniel Sayles. "We have to play harder ... we have to find that extra step. We have to play near the top of our game every time we step on the field, and if we don't ... we'll lose."

Brandon said that despite the number of yards picked up by the OSU running game, the Falcons were not dominated on the ground.

"It would have been good to slow [OSU] down more often," Brandon said. "But they were on the field a lot, and they had to perform. For the most part, I thought they did."

Ohio State won the possession battle, holding the ball for 32:04 of the game.

Linebacker Ted Piepkow, who had nine tackles and broke up a pass, said that BG was expecting a strong performance from the Buckeyes' running backs.

"We knew that they had to establish a running game because they're starting the Big Ten next week," Piepkow said. "We knew that they were going to come after us, especially with their starting quarterback out. We just weren't successful enough to get the job done."

With Craig Krenzel out, BG did a strong job limiting the OSU passing attack. Scott McMullen, making his first start of the season, was 10-16 for 118 yards passing. He was sacked three times and threw one interception.

sideline into Akron territory. She then made a pass across to the front of the net that found Wentzel, whose kick found the net with 44 seconds left to give BG a 2-1 win.

It was Wentzel's first goal as a Falcon and one that gave the Falcons their first MAC win on the year.

"It was a real good team effort today and we had full effort today by everyone out there," said Wentzel. "We deserved this win after what we've been through this year and it's exciting being that it's our first MAC win."

Coach Richards commented on how his team didn't give up, and they played hard till the end.

"What a game and what great character we showed to be able come back and win this game,"

Richards said. "It was great to see Ashley get the goal today and I'm ecstatic for her being it was her first collegiate goal."

Yesterday, the Falcons and the Raiders of Wright State played, and it was a game the Falcons controlled from start to finish.

In the first half, the Falcons generated shots early and Kristy Coppes got her third goal of the year off a pass from Meister just 20 minutes in to give BG a 1-0 lead. Then with 8 minutes left in the half, Britt Anderson was able to beat Raider goaltender Steph Comisar off a pass from Trundle and Leah Eggleton.

The Falcons took a 2-0 lead to half and then just 2 minutes into the final half of play Coppes got her second goal of the match and fourth of the season to put the final tally on the board making it 3-0.

There were missed opportunities by both teams in the final half, as both goalies made some nice saves. Emily Flohre played the second half for Wright State at goaltender and the Falcons played Jenifer Kernahan, who was able to get 4 big saves and finish the five-save shutout for the Falcons that Shingler had started.

With the wins the Falcons move to 3-5-1 on the year and now have a MAC record of 1-1-1.

"Today we had a plan in mind and the team did a good job with carrying that plan out for us," said Richards. "We got good production from Kristy today and it was really a pleasing performance that was what we really needed to have."

The Falcons will play at Valparaiso on Friday at 5:30 p.m. and will host Toledo on Sunday at 1 p.m. proceeded to score three straight points to force a time out.

The Falcons tied the match at 25-25, and then a kill and an error would lead to another time out for BG.

Melissa Mohr's kill brought the Falcons to within one, 27-26. OSU (6-2) scored the next two points and an error gave BG their 27th point, but Gordon ended the match with her 19th kill.

"I don't think Ohio State had a great match tonight either, and that's why I say it was a golden opportunity to knock them off," Van De Walle said.

"Stacey Gordon looked good tonight and we knew she would, but offensively we never got in rhythm."

The Falcons (8-4) hit .104 for the match, which is their lowest total of the season.

BG was lead by Samantha Rennau's 11 kills and Taylor Twite chipped in with nine kills off of 22 attacks, giving her a .471 hitting percentage on the night.

Co-captain Susie Norris was shutout in the kills department and had career-low minus .538 hitting percentage.

Van De Walle felt that Gordon, who also had 14 digs, was not the reason the Falcons lost.

"I don't think we were bothered by her [Gordon], I just don't think that we ever really got to the competitive degree that we needed to knock Ohio State off, she said. "We work hard, but we need to work smarter and I hope the feeling in the locker room afterwards would be one they don't want to feel again."

"They did not see Bowling Green at its best," Van De Walle said referring to upcoming opponents that may see the game tape. "If other schools are going to get a copy of this tape and prepare for the way we played tonight, it's OK. We know we're going to be a different team come next Friday and Saturday."

The Falcons will host Indiana-Purdue Fort Wayne on Friday and open up Mid-American Conference play when Western Michigan visits Anderson Arena on Friday. Both matches are scheduled to start at 7 p.m.

Roethlisberger shines in Redhawk win over Rams

By John Mossman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT COLLINS, Colo. — At 6-foot-5 and 248 pounds, Ben Roethlisberger doesn't fit the mold of a mobile, scrambling quarterback.

Two of his biggest plays on Saturday, however, were set up by scrambles.

Roethlisberger completed 29 of 39 passes for 330 yards and two touchdowns, eclipsing 300 yards for the second straight game, as Miami of Ohio romped over Colorado State 41-21.

Mike Smith added 118 yards rushing and three touchdowns.

The RedHawks' pass-oriented offense generated 536 yards compared to 388 for Colorado State and opened up 20-point leads on three occasions in the second half.

The Miami (2-1) defense, meanwhile, held Colorado

State, which had been averaging 213 yards rushing, to 39 on the ground.

Bradlee Van Pelt threw for 323 yards and three TDs for Colorado State (2-2).

"Ben has great balance and awareness," Miami coach Terry Hoepfner said. "He has the ability to keep his cool when others begin to lose it. When he is scrambling, there is a real good chance of a big play happening."

Early in the third quarter following a Colorado State fumble, Roethlisberger scrambled and threw his second TD pass, a 15-yarder to Michael Larkin, to make it 24-7.

Then, Roethlisberger scrambled and averted two sacks, completing an 18-yard pass to Martin Nance on third-and-14 to set up Todd Soderquist's 21-yard field goal for a 27-7 lead with 1:20 left in the period.

"That scramble was a key play because it was third-and-long and we needed to convert," Hoepfner said.

Roethlisberger credited his offensive line on that scramble play.

"The O-line did a great job — one, for not holding, two, for not going downfield," he said. "And the receivers got open. One of our offensive linemen said he blocked the same guy three times. I just run around and try to make guys miss me."

Colorado State scored just 24 seconds later on the second-longest scoring pass play in school history, Van Pelt's 86-yarder to David Anderson, to cut the deficit to 27-14. But the Rams would get no closer.

On fourth-and-15 from the CSU 29, Roethlisberger ran right on the option and pitched to Smith for a touchdown with 9:19 remaining.
